The Nigerian Awakening

Now that the Nigerian government has suddenly enforced the fuel subsidy removal policy, the Sleeping giant of Africa is finally waking up from her slumber. The cost of transportation and other services and goods have expectedly risen astronomically. The nation is paralyzed by strike and protesters have taken over the streets.

Media Ethics: Inside Out

An "inside out" look at media ethics and how the news is made. Where do you get your news, and do you ask the tough questions? Here's why you should!

Making Money Is Not Enough

I want to widen the conversation about business & work. As I've posted earlier, my CV has far more than details of work and skills achieved. My CV includes being active in addressing important social, environmental and health needs in my community. This 'work' [in my view this is real work] is significant for me, and for the outcomes that improve other's lives.

The Humble Pawn Shop Gains Mainstream Acceptance

Has the lengthy recession helped to create a fundamental societal change in how the American middle class views pawn shops? This and many other factors may have played a factor in the pawn shop becoming an accepted and popular alternative to many traditional financial services providers.

Commuter Travel Price Hikes in London

The first days of 2012 were opened by something very unpleasant for British commuters: a 6% price hike average, which even reached up to 11% on some routes, making London the most expensive place to commute in the world. In fact, the 3.60 that a London commuter needs to pay nowadays for a Zone 1-4 single journey is more than double the cost of similar rides in cities such as Milan, where the price is at 1.
